

Spain will get polite words from all the other European powers, but she will not get a man nor a gun, and not even many dollars. Even among her friends the outlook is not promising. The war has been carried on at the expense of Cuba, and

If any of the comment current respecting the situation at Chicago deserves particular rebuke it is certainly that which makes ungracious reference to the limited financial resources of most of the respected citizens upon whom the free silver contingent talks of conferring the greatest honor open to an American in his own country. As a matter of fact, not one of these gentlemen is out of employment. It is therefore ungracious to insinuate that they are candidates for the Presidency because they are in need of a job. Mr.

The United States has never yet been confronted with a great crisis without being able to meet and overcome it. With the hour comes the man, and those persons who are inclined to take a gloomy view of the dreadful things that are to happen at Chicago should pluck up courage. There is no cause for alarm. As long as the United States exists as a nation it will pay its debts honorably to the last cent, and as long as it is confronted with important crises the proper men will be found to come forward and grapple successfully with them. A thousand years from now will be plenty of time to talk about the country going to pieces. It is not built that way.

The only legitimate controversy which can exist is as to the means of securing the "equal intrinsic and exchangeable value of the dollar unit of coinage of both metals," whether by "international agreement, or by such safeguards of legislation as shall insure the maintenance of the parity of the two metals, and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts." This is the only controversy. There is no pretense of the "gold standard" advocates that the "gold standard" will do this. No honest gold standard advocate will make any such claim.

I am sustained in this statement by the declaration contained in the law of November 1, 1893, for the repeal of the silver purchasing clause of the Sherman law, made

The only legitimate controversy which can exist is as to the means of securing the "equal intrinsic and exchangeable value of the dollar unit of coinage of both metals," whether by "international agreement, or by such safeguards of legislation as shall insure the maintenance of the parity of the two metals, and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts." This is the only controversy. There is no pretense of the "gold standard" advocates that the "gold standard" will do this. No honest gold standard advocate will make any such claim.

I am sustained in this statement by the declaration contained in the law of November 1, 1893, for the repeal of the silver purchasing clause of the Sherman law, made

To meet the condition as regards all other and at the same time keep our money on a 100-cent basis, the silver bullion could be stored in the United States Treasury and silver notes issued against it, those notes would be redeemable at all times in 100 cents worth of silver bullion. No matter what the price of silver might be, the holder of one of these notes would be secure in withdrawing from the Government 100 cents' worth of bullion—no more, no less. To enlarge the field for these notes, the greenbacks and national bank notes should be gradually retired.

To meet the condition as regards all other and at the same time keep our money on a 100-cent basis, the silver bullion could be stored in the United States Treasury and silver notes issued against it, those notes would be redeemable at all times in 100 cents worth of silver bullion. No matter what the price of silver might be, the holder of one of these notes would be secure in withdrawing from the Government 100 cents' worth of bullion—no more, no less. To enlarge the field for these notes, the greenbacks and national bank notes should be gradually retired.